LEARNED PIG.

THE Scientific Pig, to the amateurs of proficient nature, humbly offers the proof positive, in violateation of his mach-injured progenitors, who, according to vulgar ideas, were esteemed the most obtfinste of all creation. He doubts not but his argument will be convincing, his erudition confpictious, and his docility equal, if not superior, to any brother animal now exhibiting. He typographically composes as accurately as any printer: He answer all lawful questions: He never divulges the thoughts of any lady in company but by her permission. His abilities have anazed his friends, and associated his enemies: Many of each party have flattered the patience of Mr Nicholson, his tutor. The question is now at after, and the pig has the honour to address the nobility, gentry, and generous publics, to befreeh their attendance at the Edinburgh Intelligence Office, from eleven in the morning till three in the afternoon, and from five till seven in the evening, to determine the matter of fast, viz. A ferranc of Mr. Darrel's keeping places, fome French officers would Darrel's keeping places, some French officers would enter the box, on which a scuffle ensured; during which Mrs Darrel, who was far advanced in her pregnancy, entered, and was so much terrified, on sceing the servant hun, that she fainted away. On being taken home she was delivered of a dead child, and died in great agonies the same evening. Mr Darrel is a West Ludian gentleman, and well known in this country.

Extract of a letter from Rheims, Feb. 27.

"About a fortnight ago, a boat, with about forty persons in it, crossing the Maese, near Dun, in Clermontois, was overset, and all on board, except the waterman, perished. There were eleven pregnant women among them. A labourer, being told of the dreadful accident, mounted a flout horse in a labour and immed with him into the river from an infant, and jumped with him into the river, from a bank twenty feet high. The moment he got above the waves, he directed his fwimming, with his horfe, amidst those heads of the women that appeared now and then above water. He seized eight of them by their hair, and let them successively go, till he found his wife, whom he carried afhore, and afterwards on his back, to a public house, where she gave some signs of life; but nature, by so violent a shock, forced the offspring from its mother's womb, and they both died a few minutes after. The husband, the unhappy spectator of such a dismal scene, did not survive them long. Grief had preyed so fait on his heart, that he died the next morning. They were all three buried in the faine costin. The magistrates of the town would have punished the waterman for his negligence, or want of skill; but that among the victims of his imprudence were his wife and filer."

WPON the motion of Sir Archibald Edmonupon the Scotch fiftery bill. - To be reported on Monday next. nday next.

Monday next.

Mr Brett brought up the navy estimates. The fame were read a first and second time.

Upon reading the estimates, Captain Macbride shortly observed, that he had given his opinion in the Committee of Supply against repairing the smaller vessels; and as he was then over-ruled, he should not again trouble the House upon the subject.

Mr Francis moved for the production of feveral India papers, and the fame were granted.

MESSAGE FROM HIS MAJESTY.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer role in his lace, and delivered the following message from his Majesty to the Speaker: " GEORGE R.

" HIS Majefty, confidering the eminent fervices of Sir John Skynner, late Lord Chief Baron of the Court of Exchequer, is desirous of being enabled to grant a pension of 2000 l. per annum, clear of all deductions, to the faid Sir John Skynner, during the term of his natural life. G. R."

The House to go into a Committee on Wednes-day, to consider of the said message.

INDIA BILL.

Mr Dempster rose with the view of making his motion, of which he had for fo long a period given notice to the House. He lamented exceedingly that he was by no means able to do that justice to the subject which was necessary. He stated the va-rious grievances under which British subjects laboured, in confequence of the oppressive acts of the 24th and 26th of the present King, for the better regula-rion of India. It was the less necessary for him to mention to the House these grievances, as they had been stated at large at the bar by counsel. He; was alle of opinion, that effectually to remedy these evils, it would be necessary to regulate India by a Vice-roy, a Cabinet Council, and a Legislative Assem-He would, however, on the prefent occasion, only move for leave to bring in a bill to amend and explain certain clauses in the acts of the 24th and 26th of the present King, for the better regulation of the British territories in India.

Mr Francis did not pledge himself to support Mr Dempster in all his compassionate vagaries; but he considered the present question as of the utmost confequence to the judicial procedure in India. He when recapitulated all the arguments which on this point had been teazed, lengthened, and fairly tortured of linguring existence at the bar.

M. Macdonald vindicated both the India bills from the cenfure that had been made upon them. Lie defended more particularly the Court of Judiand calculated to promote all those obets of civil liberty which his Majesty intended ould be dispensed to his oriental subjects under the elent Administration

Mr Burke considered the act, which was the obof the motion, as a diffrace to the legislation of his country. It violates the most facred principles the constitution, by depriving our fellow-subjects India of that inestimable privilege, a right of trial by Jury, and is puts them in the power of one of the most incongruous Cours of Judicature that ever yes formed. By that act, the lowest and most obuse Banyan in India might deprive a British subon to the Court of King's Bench, might procure al against him by information at the fuit of the ous violation of the facred rights of English. reason had been given, but that the old law found incompetent, particularly in cases of

This he denied; and as a proof of the

rable case of Fabriges against Mostyn, when exemplary redrefs had been given; and he had no doubt but it had a good effect in deterring many of our governors from oppressing the natives of those countries over which they had been placed.

He then adverted to that clause of the act which prohibited the East India Company from compounding their debts. This, he faid, was shutting the doors of mercy against their unfortunate debrors, and irwas shutting the doors of prudence against themselves, for surely no man would deny that it was better to receive five shillings in the pound than nothing. Having dwelt upon this for some time, he returned to the extraordinary powers which the act invested in the Atturney and Solicitor General, by establishing a power in the King's Bench paramount to that of Parliament. He called on the learned gentleman opposite to him (Mr. Durdas) to whose ancestors Scotland had been indebted for restoring the dignity of her Juries, to vindicate himself for having been concerned in framing fuch a bill as that under their consideration. Those whose curiosity led them to enquire further into this, might consult a book which would give them ampe information on the deplorable fituation of that country when their Juries were formed, on a fimilar pan with the political Juries which composed East-India judicature. The book he alluded to was, Mr Amot's Collection of Criminal Trials. It was then a very common circumstance to form a Jury of fuch men as the Judges thought proper; but there was one case, which he read with equal horror and astonishment, of a Ju-ry having been chosen from among a Clan. They ry having been chosen from among a Clan. were all Campbells, and they were to try a man o the name of Stewart, for having been accessary to the escape of another who had been accused of murdering a Campbell. In fhort, this book furnished the ftrongest arguments in favour of the rights of Juries, that any man could confult. After pointing out, in a variety of lights, the dangerous principles of the act, he concluded with giving his affent to the mo-

Sir James Johnston lamented that the Scottish Juries were not on the same footing as those in England. In Scotland they had no Grand Jury-there 45 men were picked out at the diferetion of the Sheriff of the county, from whom the Judges chafe 15 of fuch men as they could depend on. [A. laugh.] He wished that the learned gentleman (Mr Dundas) instead of the forfeited estates, had given to Scotland the more valuable possession of a trial by Jury in all cases.

Mr Pitt in a very flort speech defended the prin-ciple of the act, so far as it respected the Tribunal, which he denied to be under the influence of Administration.

Mr Burke role to explain, and was going into the argument at great length, when he was called to or-der as having spoke. To obviate this objection, Mr Burke moved the question of adjournment, which was feconded by Mr Francis. This occasioned an altercation between the Speaker and Mr. Burke.

Mr Fox rose and vindicated the privilege his honourable friend had of moving the adjourement. -With regard to the objection which had been made against his not having spoken agreeably to order, certainly the same objection was against any other member who had not observed the same rule precifely. He admitted likewife, that if one gentleman conformed to order, it was equally the duty of every other. In these particulars he seemed to glance at the partiality which he thought had been flewn on the occasion, in calling one gentleman to order and not another, who had equally committed

The Speaker spoke in vindication of his having rifen to remind the honourable gentleman (Mr Burke) of the rules of the House in moving the amendment. God forbid, faid he, that any thing which comes from the Chair should be partially directed against one gentleman, and not another under the same circumstances. The reason he had taken the liberty to observe what he did was, in conseving moved an adjournment of a question without having offered the least argument in its support. This he considered against the received rules of the House, and therefore he had taken the liberty to offer what he had done.

Mr Burke rofe in his own vindication, Having made a short reply to the Speaker, he adverted to the House proceeding to pass a question respecting a Court of Judicature, without having fufficient know-ledge of the rules of juriforudence for the purpole. He confessed himself that he knew not any rule of jurisprudence that could authorise them to agree to this bill. They probably might, although they af-fected not to have this knowledge.

Here the House began to cough in a manner too obvious to require any explanation, that it was their wishes to filence the honourable gentlemanned

Mr Burke observed, as he was speaking on a subject of justice which no reason could subvert, it was not to be coughed into filence. He then made a few other observations similar to what he was offering, when the coughing began - and then concluded, finding the House was desirous to have the question read.

Mr Dundas rofe. He faid the present motion for the adjournment was the most extraordinary of any he had ever heard. First, a motion had been made on a petition for the House to resolve itself into a Committee to hear counsel on the subject; and after counsel had been heard in this Committee, the business was then deferred on the pretence of the Committee not being then competent to decide unon the balines; and now, in confequence of fuch postponement, the House had proceeded on the same business, a motion was made to adjourn its consider-Such an extraordinary proceeding certainly must excite the furprife, and cause the animadverfions of those who had any regard for the confistency of the concerns of that House. And the Hon-Gentleman (Mr Burke) while he afferted his own privileges of speaking, must not prevent others from using theirs of coughing.
(Here the House began to cough.)

This caufed him to observe, that gentlemen might cough as much as they pleafed, whenever they hought he had trespassed on their time and patience, by faying any thing unworthy their attention.

The question being here called for, the House The numbers were, divided: Against the adjournment, deferred until this day (Monday) se'ennight. TUESDAY, March 20. Read a first time the bill for testraining the negociation of promissory notes to a limited time.

Mr Priestwood, from the Navy-office, presented accounts of rendezvous, &c. which were ordered to lie on the table.

Read a fecond time, and committed to the whole House for this day se'ennight, the vagrant act, and the infolvent debtor's bill.

Ordered the militia pay-bill to be ingroffed. The order of the day was read for a Committee of the whole House to take into further consideration the charges against Warren Hastings, Esq; Mr Courtenay having taken the chair,

Mr Francis informed the Committee, that he frould examine the gentlemen who had been ordered to attend this day, principally on the subject of the collection of the East India Company's reve-

Mr William Young, who had been examined on a former day concerning fome of the contracts granted by Mr Hastings, now appeared at the bar, and was interrogated by Mr Francis between three and four hours, chiefly with regard to the collection of the Company's revenues in the province of Bahar.

It appeared from the answers of this witness, who was formerly a member of the Provincial Council of Bahar, that Mr Hastings had, in 1781, abolished the Provincial Councils established for the collection of the revenue; that he had been induced to take this step by some public motives, not by any neglect or mismanagement of the members; that, in the witness's opinion, his true reason for such a measure was to augment his influence in the country; that, after the suppression of the Council of Bahar, by which the members had been reduced to very great inconveniencies in their circumstances, he had nated two Rajahs to collect the revenues of that province; that according to public report, (which the witness would not vouch for) these two men had made Mr Hastings a present of four lacks of rupees, (40,000 l.) that this sum was supposed to have been given him as a gratification for his appointing them collectors; that these Rajahs, in the exercise of this emilloyment, had defolated the country, ruined a-griculture, and reduced most of the inhabitants to fuch diffres, that many of them had been under a necessity of quitting the province; that one of the Rajahs, named Kellaram, had been simprisoned for the balance that remained due of his collection : that Kellaram, who, in his own defence, might have accused Mr Hallings of corruption in receiving the fum above mentioned, was unwilling to bring ward fuch an accufation, from the fear of Mr Ha-ltings's vengeauce, which he apprehended would prove fatal to him; that the lofs of revenue fuffained by the Company, in confequence of the ruin and defolation produced by the Rajahs during the time of their acting in the capacity of collectors, was very considerable, &c.

Mr Young had also a few questions put to him by Mr Burke, Mr Baring, Sir James Johnstone, and Mr Beaufoy.

When he was asked, for what reason the Rajah Kellaram, when he was imprisoned, forbore to accufe Mr Haftings of corruption, he expressed a very great reluctance to answer that question; but the Committee being of opinion, that, unless the giving an answer to it should tend to his own crimination, it was incumbent on him to answer it -he replied, that it would not, by any means, tend to criminate kindelf, but that he had the flrangest objections to answering the question. Being required, however, to comply with the defire of the Committee, he gave that answer which we have hinted at above : namely, that the cause of the Rajah's filence was, the apprehension of meeting with the fate of the Rajah Nundcomar, who was hanged in India fome years

When Mr Young's examination was concluded, Mr Francis remarked, that, as the examination of the witness had extended to a much greater length than he had at first been aware of, it would be advisable to defer examining the other gentlemen who had been required to attend. He would therefore move that the Chairman should leave the chair.

Mr Burke expressed his wish, that the charges against Mr Hastings might not be delayed. He had no objection, however, to the motion.

Mr Alderman Townsend faid a few ter which the motion was carried in the affirmative. The Chairman then quitted the chair, reported rogress, and defired leave to sit again.

The House being resamed, it was resolved that a Committee of the whole House should renew the deliberation on the charges against Mr Hastings on Thurlday next.

At a quarter before eight o'clock, the House adjourned till to-morrow.

EDINBURGH.

Extrast of a letter from London, March 21. HOUSE OF COMMONS. BARON SKYNNER'S PENSION.

"After some miscellaneous matter of very little note, the House sat without any business before them for near an hour, waiting for the Chancellor of the for near an hour, waiting for the Chancellor of the Exchequer, who, upon coming down, moved for the House's resolving itself into a Committee on his Majesty's message respecting a pension to the late Lord Chief Baron Skynner; which being agreed to, the House resolved itself into a Committee accordingly, Lord Frederick Campbell in the chair, when "Mr Pitt rose, and in a speech replete with encomiums on the late Lord Chief Baron Skynner, in which his virtues as a man, and his learning and inwhich his virtues as a man, and his learning and inwhich his virtues as a man, and his learning and in-tegrity as a Judge, were equally the fubject, the Right Hon Gentleman moved, that leave be given to bring in a bill for enabling his Majetly to grant a penfion of 2000 l. per annum, clear of all deduc-tions, to the late Lord Chief Baron Skynner, for the literary and previous formics.

" Mr Burke followed the Right Hon. Gentleman in a strain of panegyric equally honourable to the late Lord Chief Baron, and faid, that men of all descriptions must cheerfully join in the motion that had been made for rewarding his fervices.

"The motion was then put, and unanimously a-

"The House then resumed itself, and Lord Frederick Campbell reported to the House; and his Lordship and Mr Pitt were ordered to prepare and bring in a bill.

FRENCH TREATY AND CONSOLIDATION OF Customs.

Mr Baftard then called the attention of the House to the bill before it, in which the Commer-cial Treaty, and the Confolidation of the Cuttoms and Excise, were included in one and the same bill. The Hon. Gentleman reprobated this in very pointed terms, and hoped, that a practice fo very objectionable, would on no account be suffered. He disclaimed all idea of a wanton opposition to Government, and professed to ad on all occasions on true conflicational grounds; but he could by no means agree to a number of propolitions being put together, and blended in one and the fame bill.— Gentlemen had an undoubted right to confider every proposition separately and specifically, and their constituents had a right to know how they voted on every question, which was not to be thought possible in the present case, since the Honse were obliged to vote for the Commercial Treaty and the Confolidations, both of them, or not at all, though they might like one, and diflike the other. The Honourable Gentleman expatiated very much on this, and reminded the House, that the East India Bill, so often brought into question (Mr Fox's bill) and which had been rejected, might have paffed, had it been tacked to a bill that would have raifed no opposition to it. In short, if distinct bill, the minister might always, carry what bill he pleafed, however, unpopular and odious, by tacking it to one that was not to. For these and other rea-fons that he mentioned, he moved, That the said bill for the Commercial Treaty and the Confolida. the Cultons might be made two bills of, if the Committee should think proper to to do.

"Sir William Lemon seconded the motion, though, like the Honourable Gentleman who spoke before, he had no objection to either the Commer-cal Treaty, or the Confolidation of the Customs; the latter of which he spoke of in the highest terms of panegyric.

"Mt Vyner spoke on the same side, and reprobated
"Treaty, and represented, that he was, notwithstanding, obliged to vote for it, or reject the Confolidation of the Cufloms, of which he highly approved.

"Mr Pitt flrongly contended against the moflon, and pronounced it impracticable to divide the bill in question. He insisted upon it; that it was neither new nor unparliamentary, to put more than one or two propositions into one and the same bill; and argued, that should the Consolidation of the Cultoms be separated from the Commercial Treaty, the fame objections would still remain, as the confolidation part of the bill contained a great many propositions, since in fact, every article of goods, &c. imported or exported, were diffined and different ones.

" The Chanceller of the Exchequer was entering very largely into the question, and the House was expected to sit late, as Mr Fox, Mr Dundas, Sir Grey Cooper, Mr Burke, Mr Welbore Ellis, kc. were preparing to speak.

"The Scotch fishery bill, which went through a Committee of the whole House on Monday, is to be reported and read a third time on Monday next. "The Committee up stairs on the petition on Aberbrothwick harbour, fat to day, and ordered in a on Saturday the 9th inflant, as fome men were working in a quarry at Hartlepool in the county of Durham, belonging to Mr John Middleton, they discovered, at the depth of eight feet under ground, a place walled round of about three feet diameter, and two feet deep, at the bottom of which they found a piece of flesh weighing about a pound and a half, which had not even the smallest filament corrupted, but the colour, confiltency, and fmell per-feally good. Some time ago they found, at the distance of about five feet from the above mentioned fpot, and only three feet under ground, a large ear-then furnace pot, well cemented all round. It is very probable that this has been fome hiding place in former times, as they were fo near the Scots; but how that piece of flesh was preserved from moulder-ing by the air contained in the cavity, cannot easily be explained.

N. B. We have frequently heard that concrete fubstances of animal fat have been found in vaults uncorrupted, after having lain many ages, and after all the other parts of the body had been entirely decaved.

In the Irish House of Commons on Tuesday the 13th, Mr Grattan role to introduce a conversation on tithes, which was, he faid, a subject that must come before Parliament; and therefore, he thought it was proper to lay fome foundation for it this prefent session. We have, said he, admitted the diffress of the poor people of the fouth—we have admitted that they are the most miserable of mankind—and, admitting this, we have condemned their mutinies with feverity; and though we have acknowledged that their diffress should be relieved, we have postponed taking any measures for that pur-pose. This, therefore, makes it necessary for me to take up the subject, which, from when has occur-red, naturally divides itself into two heads—the difirefles of the people, and the redress to be applied to them. Mr Grattan here went into a very long and able discussion of the distresses the poor laboured under from the exaction of tithes, and concluded with moving a refolution to the following purport:

"That if it shall appear to this House, at the commencement of the next fession of Parliament, that tranquillity has been reflored to the powe of the kingdom which have lately been different by outrage, and that due obedience is paid to the laws, this House will take into confideration the subject of tithes, and confider of fome plan for the honourable fupport of the clergy."

Mr Secretary Orde faid, He had liftened with anxiety and concern to the speech of the Right Honourable Gentleman; and they had both been increafed by the motion now made. He would, however, take the liberty of reminding him, that under the present circumstances of the country, it was impossible in any degree to hold out an expectation, that the House would enter upon the subject. He admitted the capability of the Right Honoura ble Gentleman to propole measures, and that no man was more capable of giving consequence to any subject. But, should the House agree to the motion, they would be capitulating with insurrection, and offering a reward for that obedience to the laws on which they had a right to infilt.

A long debate enfued; in the course of which a number of members delivered their fentiments. The order of the day was then moved for, which precluded the question from being pur, and the House adjourned.—Although unsuccessful in his morion Mr Grattan has established one fact, and extorted a confession of it from all sides of the House, that the peafantry of Ireland are a most oppressed, wretched, and hapless body of men.

Wednesday the 14th, after the manifest bill was read, Mr Corry observed, that the bill just read was for preventing frauds in his Majesty's revenue, and was therefore what was generally understood to be a revenue bill. The question therefore was, Whether gentlemen would suffer a perpetual revenue bill to go into a committee. He thought it sufficient that they should just hear the bill to reject it.

The Autorney General replied, That the Right

Honourable General replied, I hat the Right Honourable Gentleman might as well object to the Exafe laws, as to the prefent bill. It went to establish a regulation which was wished for by all men in business, to compel the master of the vessel to produce a manifest and invoice of his cargo; and therefore it would be very extraordinary, if it could be construed a perpetual revenue bill. Several other members spoke, when the question being put for committing the bill, there appeared for the commit-tal 69, sgainst at, 28. Royal affent to a number of bills.

The Right Hon. Mr Speaker's speech to his Grace the Lord Lieutenant, in the House of Price the Lord Lieutenant, in the House of Peers yesterday evening, on presenting the bills.

May it please your Grace,

The wisdom of the principle which the Commons have established and preserved in, under your Grace's auspices, of preventing the further accumulation of national debt, is now powerfully selections the further accumulation of national debt, is now powerfully selections. throughout the kingdom, in its many beneficial con-fequences—public credit has gradually rifen to a height unknown for many years—agriculture has brought in new supplies of wealth—and the merchants and manufacturers are each encouraged to extend their efforts, by the fecurity it has given them, that no new taxes will obliruft the progress of their works, or impede the fuccess of their speculations.

"Such is the happy situation of this kingdom from the support which your Grace's constant and zealous care has given to the operation of that principle; and this fituation is peculiarly fortunate at the present period, when his Majesty's gracious attention to the interests of his people has opened new objects of manufacture, and new channels of com-objects of manufacture, and new channels of com-merce, to their industry.

"Happy, however, as our fituation is, we know that all its bleffings will be a vain expectation, if a spirit of outrage and opposition to law shall pre-vent internal industry, and depreciate the national character; we have, therefore, applied outselves to form such laws as mult, under the firmnels and industry, and depreciate the national form such laws as must, under the firmness and justice of your Grace's government, effectually and speedily suppress that lawless spirit.

As His Majesty's faithful Commons do now chearfully continue all the present taxes; and having constainty experienced how well-founded their considence has been in your Grace's prudent administration of the public treasure, they do with the greater satisfaction declare, that they give and grant them in the most decided expectation, that by your Grace's frugal and just management of the public revenue, they will be rendered sufficient to answer the public expense without the sufficient to answer the public expence without the further accumulation of debt or encrease of taxes."

Extract of a letter from Porth, March 21.
"On the night betwixt Sunday and Monday laft, a most most alarming fire broke out here, in a house a most most alarming fire broke out here, in a house in the South Street, which raged with great violence for about five hours. The two upper slats were almost totally destroyed, and very little of the furniture saved. Luckily the books, papers, and surniture in the under slat, which was employed as the custom-house, were timeously removed. The night was uncommonly calm, which prevented any of the neighbouring houses from receiving damage, which was the more fortunate, as several wooden houses were adjoining. A young woman, servant of the samily, who had ventured too far in quest of her clothes, was so much scorched with the slames, that she died yesterday. Indeed, it was owing to a most the died yesterday. Indeed, it was owing to a most uncommon and providential circumstance that the lives of the rest of the family were preserved.—A cat, which had been inclosed in one of the bed rooms, being nearly suffocated with the smoke, ran through being nearly luttocated with the smoke, tan through the room, making a great noise, scratching on the chairs, &c. and awaked a young lady that slept in the room, just in time to preserve her own life and that of the relt of the family. The sire is conjectured to have been kindled by the carelesses of the girl who lost her life, and who had gone up to one of the garret rooms with a candle, a few hours before."

R GLOVER was born in the neighbourhood of Soho fquare, about the year 1736, and was christened Frederic, in consequence of the marriage of his late Royal Highness Frederic Prince of Wales, which happened that year. His father was a pictore dealer, in which he was reckoned to excel, nor was the fon deficient in a gentlemanly knowledge of that art.

After receiving a good classical education, he was put apprentice to Mr Smith, an eminent surgeon at that time in Pall-mall. Here he made more than a sufficient progress, but the love of the Muses (the fifter art of painting) calling him from this profef-fion—he abruptly left his principal, and in company with the late David Erskine Baker (author of the Companion to the Playhouse, &c.) rambled to Edinburgh, where he foon after got an engage actor at that theatre, then under the management of the late Mr Lee, to whom he was likewife ferviceable as an author in prologue writing, dramatical alterations, &cc. &c.

Here he married - and here too it should be noriced, to the honour of his widow, who is still living, that for the space of thirry years, " she bore her fa-culties most meekly," and exerted an unremitting attention to a very numerous family, under a great variety of trying circumstances. From Edinburgh he passed over into Ireland, and foon after joined the theatrical corps of Barry and Woodward, at that time (1758) performing at Crows street theatre—Between Dublin and Cork he continued for about feven years - no ways diftinguished as an after, but always loved and respected as a

Tired of the histrionic life, in which he found no profeed of excelling, he returned to the profession he was bred in, and received his studies under the late celebrated Dr Cleghorn of Dublin. At this period it was, that on account of a wager, he recovered to life a convict of the name of Patrick Maddan, after hanging for the space of twenty-feven mi-nutes, and from this circumstance he deduced many pleafagt flories, which no man's fancy and manner were more capable of improving.

He returned to London in 1767 - where, ab-firacting about four years that he ferved in the Ef-fex Militia, as a Lieutenant and Sargeon, he consi-aued to his death, which happened fuddenly on Sunday the 25th of February 1787, labouring to maintain a numerous family, partly from the exer-cise of his pen, and partly from the profits of his profession.

Of his salents as a surgeon, it is said he wanted nothing but a more extensive practice to give him celebrity, which he certainly would have obtained had industry bore any proportion to his abilities.

As an author, he had the same drawoack upon his talents; for though possessed of a good talte, and sufficient information, yet his bags zeft for seciety brought on the site of procrassination so often, that, except a sew songs, prologues, and epigrams, the leisure of his earlier days, and some halty compilations, the dradgery of his latter—there are no traces of his pen. ces of his pen.

We are to look then for his principal celebrity as

We are to look then for his principal celebrity as a companionable man; and fure none underflood that art better, from "the feast of reason," to the "fetting the table in a rost." Ruffing much with the world, from his earliest days, and endowed with a happy memory and good taste, he had collected an uncommon share of anecdote, which he either told independently, or by a knack peculiar to himself, so trimmed and adapted to the present moment, that each became new after the twentieth telling. that each became new after the twentieth telling. He gave them too in the highell tones of good humour and pleafantry, free from the least ill narrier or dark infinitations; and if, at any time, he unknowingly gave offence to the captious or the fqueamith, his philanthropic book, and open hand, ever at that time stretched out as a mark of amity, instantly restored good fellowship.

Most bon companions have their particular days and hours of good humour; but Glover was a perennial fountain of delight. Introduce him into any company, and he instantly answered the demands of his character—all was wit, pleasantry, and good nature; insomuch that, at parting, (which was generally very late), it was the bour, and not the inclination, that said ABITO.

But, "Who to frail mortality shall trust?" This sprightly, convivial, innocent creature was sprace, renewing this awful lesson to his friends, "that all must perish," even that each became new after the twentieth telling.

" The GREAT GLOBE itelf.

Yea, all which it inherit, shall disfolye; And, like the baseless sabric of a vision, Leave not a wreck behind !"
